Not What I Was

Recently I was shocked by a picture on social media, but not because it was your typical social-media shocker. It was a picture of Jamie and me. Although I was surprised again by my wife's beauty, I was more shocked by the guy in the picture with her. I almost didn't recognize myself. I was about 30lbs heavier in the photo.

Even more surprising was the fact that the photo wasn't taken so long ago. I thought to myself, How is it possible that I've changed that much?

But people do change, and not just physically. That may seem like stating the obvious, but it's more important than you might realize. Some change is depressing. But other change is wonderful. We've seen, in our "Read Through the Bible" plan this week, a similarly shocking transformation in Jacob's life in Genesis 32. (I wonder if his wife recognized him after this chapter.) Jacob's brother is on his way to meet with him—and the last time they saw each other, Jacob had stolen his inheritance. So as you read the story, you picture Jacob, scared. You can even hear it in the desperation of his prayer: "Please deliver me from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau, for I fear him" (Genesis 32:11).

Don't miss this: Jacob didn't always look this way. If you reviewed Jacob's old picture you would see an avoider. A hider. A cheater. A thief.

But that's not what you see here. By the time Jacob was preparing for the encounter with Esau, Jacob prayed about his specific struggle. He was different. His understanding of how to deal with his fears had changed.

At this point in the story, Jacob definitely had not arrived. He wasn't yet everything God would make him. (And maybe during his years on earth he never became everything he might have.) But he wasn't who he had been. He was changed.

I love this phrase:

"I'm not what I could be. I'm not what I should be. But I'm not what I was."

Every now and then, it's good to look back and take inventory of who we were, who we are, and who we're becoming. Let's not be satisfied with the person we were last year. Let's press on to everything the Lord has for us.

Today I look very different from that person in the not-so-old picture on my timeline. But I'm realizing that's a good thing. When I look at that person, I can say . . . "I'm not what I could be. I'm not what I should be. But I'm not what I was."

Maybe you need to say that to yourself in the mirror today.

Questions for reflection

- As you look back to who you were, what are some of the biggest changes God has brought about in your life?
- Consider who you will be by the close of this year. What is one thing you pray God will change in you?
