Sermon Thoughts: Basin Theology

Preachers talk a lot about giving, but when you get right down to it, it all comes down to Basin Theology. You may be thinking, "Basin Theology, what's that?" Remember what Pilate did when he had the chance to acquit Jesus? He called for a basin and washed his hands of the whole thing. But Jesus, the night before his death, called for a basin and proceeded to wash the feet of his disciples.

It all comes down to Basin Theology. Which basin will you use?

What a vulnerable position Jesus was in. He knew Judas was about to betray him. He knew of his impending mockery, torture, crucifixion, and death. He knew Peter would soon deny him. He knew the disciples would scatter when he got arrested.

And yet, instead of washing his hands of the whole situation like Pilate did (and like I would be inclined to do)—Jesus removed his outer garments and clothed himself with a towel and began to wash the disciples' feet.

Whenever we love deeply or invest in a relationship, there is the possibility of disappointment and betrayal. Jesus knew that love means being vulnerable, and he chose to love anyway.

It's a hurtful thing to be betrayed and denied by friends. It takes a lot of courage to trust someone again. But here is Jesus—knowing they will betray him—humbling himself before them. God clothed in flesh clothed in a towel and washing their feet.

Artists depict Jesus in many ways, but very few sculpt or paint Jesus as the servant—on his knees—washing smelly feet. This is not a pleasant view of Jesus. He isn't acting like an all-powerful Lord but like a servant doing a very menial task.

Jesus' love for these disciples—and for us—is beyond our human reasoning. Do you find it difficult to love unconditionally because of a fear of rejection? Do you find it hard to forgive because you think you will be hurt again?

Jesus, knowing perfectly well the fickle allegiance of his disciples, loved them anyway. We love the garment of humility, but we prefer to see it on someone else.

It all comes down to Basin Theology.

We prefer Pilot's basin. We'd rather wash our hands of the friend that has hurt us. We'd rather wash our hands of any responsibility to love and forgive. We'd rather wash our hands of those who may hurt our reputation if we associate with them.

But Jesus is a washing Savior. He washes his disciples' feet. He washes us in the blood of the Lamb. Jesus uses a basin of forgiveness.
